

How do you know that you're ready

Isn't it strange that people decide if the person is the right person based on gut feelings and, well, feelings; not the logical conditions or characteristics.

It could have worked, but because it didn't feel right, it didn't work. Maybe it's because there was a thorn that was pricking the person.

So, how do you know if you're ready? Ready for love again or ready to move on. How do you know if this person is the right person?

There's always reasons to like someone; it could be because they're funny or because they're smart. Perhaps, it's because they complement your flaws. But, to love someone, logic and reason have no footing. But, it's also precisely because of the absence of logic and reason, relationships work.

But, at the same time, how do you know if you truly love someone? Is it because you see someone else in the person? Is it because you long for a warm embrace or is it, well, you really love that person.

However, the feeling of doesn't feel right doesn't just appear out of thin air; it has to come from somewhere and the choice is to face it together or to face it alone.

Well, some things just don't work out. But, it doesn't mean that it wasn't valuable.